

You said, we did – Quality Checkers

The team working on Quality Checking talked about tools for mental health services and assessment and treatment units.

You said

- They advised on what would be helpful in a Quality Checking toolkit.

These are for mental health services and assessment and treatment units.

You gave some thoughts on what might work in Quality Checking tools for autistic people.

We did

- The team used the advice of the group to develop a draft Quality Checking tool for assessment and treatment units for people with a learning disability.

- The Quality Checkers team also used the advice of the group to change the mental health service Quality Checking tool.

- We put the draft toolkits on the website for more people to comment on them.

- We listened to peoples comments and are changing the toolkits some more.

- The final toolkits will be published on NHS England's website by the end of March or April.

- We have heard that Quality Checking could be useful for autistic people too and continue to feed this into discussions about quality and feedback.
