

You said, we did – what's important to you

We asked the group what are the biggest things they'd like to help change.

You said

- You would like to help health and social care work together better.

- You would like to improve how the NHS works with autistic people, people with a learning disability and family carers.

You also talked about how to promote the advisory group.

We did

- We are updating the You said, we did webpages to show what things the advisory group have changed.

You can find the updated You said, we did webpages at <https://tinyurl.com/YouSaidWeDid>

- In the NHS Long Term Plan there are ideas for how the NHS and social care can work together.
- One way is how GPs will work with other organisations in their area like social care. This are called primary care networks.
- Social prescribing is another way doctors can work more closely with organisations in their area. Social prescribing is where doctors put you put you in touch with things like community groups or places to get advice
- We make sure these include people with a learning disability, autistic people and family carers.

The Department of Health and Social Care are soon going to ask people how they can improve culture through training (a consultation).

We will tell Department of Health and Social Care what the advisory group has told us about training.
