

You said, we did – Allied Health Professionals

We talked about Allied Health Professionals and how they can help make sure people get the right support at the right time.

You said:

Allied Health Professionals need to get to know people and plan care around each person as an individual - for example by making reasonable adjustments.

It should be easier for people to get direct help from Allied Health Professionals, without having to go through a GP (family doctor).

We need to make sure that people know about Allied Health Professionals - for example there needs to be more accessible information.

Allied Health Professionals need to communicate well with each other and with other health, social care and education services.

Allied Health Professionals need a good understanding of autistic people and people with a learning disability.

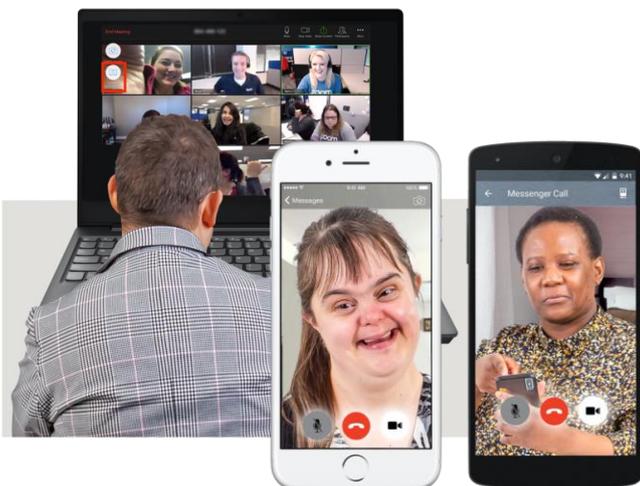

We did:

What the advisory group told us is being used to decide what needs to go into the new Allied Health Professionals strategy (the plan for how Allied Health Professionals will work over the next 5 years).

It is being used to help understand what things might get in the way of people getting help from Allied Health Professionals.

The Allied Health Professionals team are also using the advisory group's feedback to involve other people in the work they are doing.
